

My view is that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has greatly improved the quality of my personal, professional and family time at home. It got so bad I was on the verge of seriously considering eliminating home phone service.

Indiana's law has been extremely effective and has reduced the 20-30 calls I would receive every 2-3 days down to 1-2 per week. Often calls came between 4-8 pm weekdays during dinner and family time and all day on Saturday and even Sunday evenings!

I will be very disturbed if Indiana's law is not allowed to continue. I suggest any national standard that is lower than any state standard should not apply in such states, only to states that have a weaker or no standard. Please do not interfere with Indiana's law's remarkable success!
